All 24 Assembly seats representing Los Angeles County residents are up for election this year, and with no incumbent running in five of them, things could heat up as folks battle it out for the open seats.

The five races with no incumbent are Districts 34, 42, 65, 66 and 67, which are represented by Assemblymembers Tom Lackey, Jacqui Irwin, Mike Gipson, Al Muratsuchi and Sharon Quirk-Silva, respectively. All five current office holders are termed out and can't seek reelection.

Along with the Assembly races, eight state Senate seats — for a total of 32 legislative races — will appear on L.A. County ballots during the June 2 primary election. In some cases, an incumbent may have no one challenging him/her for reelection.

We won't know for sure until the California secretary of state releases the official list of certified candidates Thursday.

But according to preliminary lists of potential candidates — based on who filed with their local county election offices — it appears two current assemblymembers in L.A. County may end up running unopposed: Assemblymembers Mark Gonzalez, D-Los Angeles, and Tina McKinnor, D-Inglewood.

One more thing to note about the state legislative races: The top two vote-getters move on to the general election, regardless of political party. This is the case even if one candidate gets over 50% of the votes in the primary election. And even in races with just two candidates in the primary, there will still be a general election.

Below is a tentative look at how L.A. County Assembly races are shaping up. The list can still change; we'll know next week who's officially on the ballot.

Voter registration data was taken from the secretary of state's latest registration report.
