Southern California is seeing a heat wave that will have the thermometer hovering near 100 degrees in parts of Orange County the next few days. Yet crews across the region are bracing for a downpour.

An El Niño forecast that officials say could be historic has agencies across OC preparing for the worst-case scenarios, attempting to ready residents with community meetings and getting staff trained so they are prepared to quickly respond to potential storm damage.

"We get it, people are sweltering," Anaheim city spokesperson Mike Lyster said. "But we still have to prepare."

"And we have to prepare for the maxi-

Gov. Gavin Newsom had a lot of decisions to make in 2026.

No, we're not talking about what's next for the termed-out governor who is largely considered to be a possible presidential contender in 2028. But, rather, whether to approve the 1,160 bills the California Legislature sent him this year.

Those bills ranged from providing
