SACRAMENTO, Calif. — California Gov. Gavin Newsom and state lawmakers returned to the state Capitol on Monday to begin a special session to protect the state's progressive policies ahead of another Trump presidency.

The Democratic governor, a fierce critic of President-elect Donald Trump, is positioning California to once again be the center of a resistance effort against the conservative agenda.

He is asking his Democratic allies in the Legislature, who hold supermajorities in both chambers, to approve additional funding for the attorney general's office to prepare for a robust legal fight against anticipated federal challenges.

"We will work with the incoming administration and we want President Trump to succeed in serving all Americans," Newsom said in a statement. "But when there is overreach, when lives are threatened, when rights and freedoms are targeted, we will take action."

Democratic Assemblyman Jesse Gabriel on Monday introduced legislation to set aside $25 million for legal fees to respond to potential attacks by the Trump administration on state policies regarding civil rights, climate change, immigration and abortion access.
