What you need to know: Governor Newsom signed into law two crucial bills designed to expand housing options and provide greater stability for vulnerable Californians who are experiencing homelessness. The new laws clear the path for additional emergency shelter beds using hotels and motels and streamline the building of Accessory Dwelling Units (ADUs) throughout the state.

The bills will assist local governments and housing providers to create:

ADDITIONAL SHELTER: AB 2835, authored by Assemblymember Jesse Gabriel, removes the sunset date on tenancy rules that make it easier for service providers to place people experiencing homelessness into privately owned hotels and motels for more than 30 days. This approach has been proven to enhance stability for those in need.

MORE HOUSING UNITS: AB 3057, authored by Assemblymember Lori Wilson, will help streamline and jumpstart the process for local governments to permit and facilitate the construction of Junior Accessory Dwelling Units to create more affordable living spaces throughout the state.

More shelter

Local governments and service providers throughout the state have successfully used hotels and motels to provide housing for homeless individuals. These efforts have been enhanced through Governor Newsom's pioneering and nation-leading housing programs. Since 2019, the state has invested over $27 billion to support local governments in providing services and housing to help prevent and end homelessness, including $3.3 billion for Homekey, $1 billion in Encampment Resolution Funding, and $4.85 billion in Homelessness Housing Assistance Program funds. The state encourages local governments to use this funding to ramp up efforts to support people experiencing homelessness and help get people out of dangerous encampments.

In 2023, roughly 181,000 Californians experienced homelessness, with approximately 90,000 people in unsheltered conditions. Using Governor Newsom's unprecedented investments and support, many local communities have worked towards solving unsheltered homelessness by using available space in hotels and motels to supplement available shelter beds. This strategy not only creates additional safe and stable interim shelter for Californians experiencing homelessness but also helps ensure that service providers can more easily connect and support people with the services they need to access housing and exit homelessness permanently. AB 2835 extends local governments' and service providers' ability to use this tool indefinitely.

"We need solutions to our homelessness crisis that are both compassionate and effective," said Assemblymember Jesse Gabriel. "AB 2835 will deliver on both fronts by providing much-needed stability to kids and families experiencing homelessness while also cutting red tape and saving taxpayer resources. I am proud to partner with Governor Newsom on this effort and appreciate his continued leadership."

More housing

Although there are many reasons why someone may lose access to housing, the lack of available affordable homes in California is a key driver. Most people who enter homelessness are rent-burdened and cite economic hardship such as increased rent or housing costs. Adding to the inventory of available housing is an essential part of the state's strategy to address this challenge. Accessory Dwelling Units (ADUs) and Junior Accessory Dwelling Units (JADUs) are innovative and effective options for adding much-needed housing in California.

California has helped create new housing by expanding and streamlining the process of creating ADUs and holding local governments who unlawfully block housing production accountable. Today's bills expand this support by extending to JADUs the current exemptions from the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) that apply to local laws that allow the creation of standard ADUs.

"AB 3057 represents a small but significant technical change that offers Californians more accessible and efficient options to build affordable housing solutions," said Assemblywoman Lori D. Wilson. "By simplifying the process for constructing junior accessory dwelling units (JADUs), this bill makes it faster, cheaper, and easier for families to create additional living spaces within their homes, helping to address our state's housing shortage. This legislation allows families to stay closer together and fosters stronger, more connected communities. I am grateful to Governor Newsom for signing this bill and to California YIMBY for their unwavering commitment to making California an affordable place for everyone."

Housing for all Californians

Since taking office, Governor Newsom has invested over $40 billion to boost affordable housing and more than $27 billion to address homelessness. Today's announcement follows Governor Newsom's recent executive order that, among other things, urges local governments to use the unprecedented state funding to address unsanitary and dangerous encampments within their communities and provide people experiencing homelessness in the encampments with the care and supportive services they need.

The Governor has also enacted dozens of CEQA reforms into law and championed the creation of the Housing Accountability Unit at the California Department of Housing and Community Development to ensure cities and counties fulfill their legal responsibilities to plan and permit their fair share of housing. This focus on accountability has, in part, led to a 15-year high in housing starts in California.
