Flamin' Hot Cheetos may be one of San Antonio's most deliciously spicy staples, but they're definitely not good for you.

That's been top of mind for California state lawmakers lately. Last week, they approved a bill to ban "certain chemical food dyes found to be toxic to humans" from being served in public schools, per the Sacramento Bee. That means no Flamin' Hot Cheetos and no Fruit Loops.

Authored by California state Rep. Jesse Gabriel, AB 2316 — or the School Food Safety Act — cleared California's Assembly floor May 21 in a 59-0 vote.

"California has a responsibility to protect our students from chemicals that harm children and that can interfere with their ability to learn," Gabriel said in a March 12 news release. Specifically, the bill would ban Red Dye No. 40, Yellow Dye No. 5, Yellow Dye No. 6, Blue Dye No. 1, Blue Dye No. 2 and Green Dye No. 3, plus the food additive titanium dioxide.

In April 2021, the California Office of Environmental Health Hazard Assessment released a study that showed food products including those chemicals named in the bill were linked to behavioral difficulties and decreased attention in children.

"As a lawmaker, a parent and someone who struggled with ADHD, I find it unacceptable that we allow schools to serve foods with additives that are linked to cancer, hyperactivity and neurobehavioral harms," Gabriel said in the release. "This bill will empower schools to better protect the health and wellbeing of our kids and encourage manufacturers to stop using these dangerous additives."
