The outcomes of the races in the state Assembly districts that touch Los Angeles County moved closer to complete on Wednesday afternoon — though it became clearer that some of the battles won't truly be over until the last ballot is counted later this month.

The top two vote-getters in the primary, regardless of party preference, will proceed to a November runoff. If there are only two candidates running, they will both automatically advance.

Here's where the races stand as of Wednesday evening, according to the California Secretary of State's office and the L.A. County registrar:

Assembly District 34: Incumbent Republican Assemblymember Tom Lackey led the race to represent Barstow, Palmdale, Lancaster and Needles with 66.3% of the vote. Democratic challenger Ricardo Ortega, a peer advocate with the Children's Law Center of California, followed with 33.7%.

Assembly District 39: Incumbent Democratic Assemblymember Juan Carrillo led the race to represent Victorville and parts of Palmdale and Lancaster with 51.3% of the early vote. His Republican challenger Paul Marsh, a former Palmdale city councilmember, followed with 48.74% of the vote.

Assembly District 40: Republican challenger Patrick Gipson, former L.A. County sheriff deputy, snagged 53.06% of the vote, putting him in the lead to represent Santa Clarita and part of the San Fernando Valley. Incumbent Democratic Assemblymember Pilar Schiavo had 46.94% of the vote,

Assembly District 41: With 41.9% of the vote, Republican former Altadena City Councilmember Michelle Del Rosario Martinez with 42.2% led the race to replace termed-out Democratic Assemblymember Chris Holden and represent Pasadena, Altadena, La Cañada Flintridge, Monrovia and Sierra Madre in L.A. County and Rancho Cucamonga, Wrightwood, San Antonio Heights in San Bernardino County. Democratic former mayor of Sierra Madre John Harabedianwas next with 30%. Following the top two were Democratic public safety executive Phlunte' Riddle with 14.6% and Democratic Claremont City Councilmember Jed Leano with 13.2%.
