SACRAMENTO, Calif. -- The California chapters of Moms Demand Action and Students Demand Action, both part of Everytown for Gun Safety's grassroots network, issued the following statement after the Senate Appropriations Committee failed to advance AB 1127. The legislation would have prohibited gun dealers from selling firearms that can be easily converted into fully automatic weapons through the simple installation of a Glock switch, which enables the pistols to fire at a rate of 1,200 rounds per minute.

"Gun safety should be a right -- not a privilege. For decades, Californians have been protected by strong gun safety laws. Today, lawmakers failed to continue that legacy," said Sharon Genkin, a volunteer with the California chapter of Moms Demand Action. "It's inconceivable how lawmakers heard about the impacts of these weapons directly from survivors and still looked the other way. We thank Assemblymember Jesse Gabriel for his commitment to this fight and look forward to working together again to stop the spread of DIY machine guns once and for all."

"It is devastating to watch politicians fail to pass laws that will reduce gun violence, especially when guns are the number one killer of my generation," said Landon Block, a volunteer leader with Students Demand Action in California. "We deserve leaders who will stand up for bold solutions, not stand by waiting for the next tragedy. Students like me are tired of hearing excuse after excuse while we are forced to live in fear of being gunned down in our schools, neighborhoods, and communities. We know what it takes to reduce gun violence, and this lack of action is unacceptable."

For decades, the gun industry has known about the risk of easily convertible pistols, yet gun makers have refused to fix this problem, contradicting former employees and ignoring the fact that competing handguns are simply incompatible with switches. Between 2017 and 2021, the ATF recovered 5,454 machine gun conversion devices, including Glock switches, a 570% increase from the preceding five years.
