Incumbents for three Assembly seats in the heart of the San Fernando Valley had no trouble holding onto their seats, based on early results from Tuesday's election.

In the northeast San Fernando Valley's 39th district's, Assemblywoman Luz Rivas, a Democrat who now represents this district after winning a June special election to fill an unexpired term, was easily fending off Ricardo Benitez, a business owner and a Republican.

The 39th district includes the city of San Fernando, and the Los Angeles city neighborhoods of Sylmar, Lake View Terrace, Mission Hills, Sunland-Tujunga, Sun Valley, Arleta, Pacoima and North Hollywood.

In the central portion of the Valley, Democratic Assemblyman Adrin Nazarian, appeared headed to a fourth term, despite facing a challenge from Republican businesswoman Roxanne Beckford Hoge in Tuesday's general election race for the 46th district seat.

The 46th district encompasses communities in the central and southern portions of the San Fernando Valley, including the neighborhoods of North Hills, Panorama City, Van Nuys, Sherman Oaks, Valley Village, Studio City, Valley Glen, Lake Balboa and North Hollywood.

On the west side of the Valley, the 45th district Assembly race featured a match up between Cal State University of Northridge political science major Justin Clark, was no match for constitutional rights attorney Jesse Gabriel, who was elected to represent the district in a June special election.

The district they are seeking to represent includes the city of Calabasas, and the Los Angeles city communities of Chatsworth, West Hills, Canoga Park, Winnetka, Reseda and Northridge.

Tuesday's general election race was to fill the regular two-year term beginning Dec. 3.
