GLENDALE, Calif.-Last week, the Southern California Armenian Democrats (SCAD) announced its official endorsement list for the 2018 California Gubernatorial elections.

SCAD's endorsement process consists of a meticulous two-page questionnaire and a follow-up interview with the club's "Candidate Interview & Endorsement Committee" chaired by Paul Naccachian. The questionnaire covered topics of significant importance to SoCal residents, including issues relating to the environment, education, minority rights, and small business development. "The committee had the task of implementing a meaningful process, which meant that candidates were not only challenged to critically examine the issues as they relate to our daily lives, but it also asked them to evaluate the long-term plans on how to deliver results to those living in our communities," said Naccachian.

After lengthy and lively debates amongst SCAD's Executive Board members, it was clear that a consensus would be difficult to reach. SCAD President Arthur Charchian explains, "The decisions were definitely difficult because all of the candidates were very qualified. However, as questionnaires were reviewed, and candidates closely evaluated, the democratic process won out."

Founder and Honorary Chair, Dr. Armond Aghakhanian, discussed the club's scope and impact. "As the largest Armenian-American democratic entity in California and the United States, an endorsement from SCAD is a transfer of responsibility, indicating that the candidates have themselves become a tone in the voice of the Armenian Democrats; a calling not to be taken lightly. With over 700 members, SCAD is not only a club, it is a movement. It is a movement for change - and change is definitely coming."
