The future of San Fernando Valley political leadership is in front of voters.

The presidency is on the ballot. But so are scores of races in and around the San Fernando Valley.

Come January, whoever voters choose will have a bearing on policy decisions on everything from housing for the homeless, to being a check on presidential power, to aid for small business, to education policy. That's in addition to local, state and federal approaches to environmental and labor issues, along with how to deal with a relentless pandemic.

In a vast and diverse region that rivals the size of cities and counties, it's worth one last look at Valley races before Tuesday.

Here is a roundup of who's running in the San Fernando Valley and neighboring communities:
