Won't back assemblyman pushing Legislature secrecy

Re: "Walters: Allowing Legislature to act with greater secrecy" (Opinion section, June 4):

Assembly Constitutional Amendment 25 (the amendment to make the Legislature opaque again) was chiefly co-authored by Assembly Members Rob Bonta, David Chiu, Mike Gipson, Wendy Carrillo and Evan Low.

Assembly Members Cecilia Aguiar-Curry, Marc Berman, Richard Bloom, Tasha Boerner Horvath, Ian Calderon, Kansen Chu, Jordan Cunningham, Tom Daly, Susan Eggman, Jesse Gabriel, Cristina Garcia, Ash Kalra, Marc Levine, Adrin Nazarian, Bill Quirk, Sharon Quirk-Silva, Eloise Reyes, Luz Rivas, Freddie Rodriguez, Blanca Rubio, Christy Smith and Buffy Wicks were co-authors.

I'm sorry to say that I voted for one of the co-authors in the last election. I won't make the mistake of voting for him again.

Absolutely no need for violence from any party

Re: "San Jose: Police shoot alleged sideshow driver who hit pedestrian and motorcycle cop" (Mercurynews.com, June 2):

I was utterly disturbed upon reading this article.

With all the protests going on and all the anger in the world, it makes sense that individuals are upset at the police, but this by no means indicates that citizens should freely harm anyone.

There is absolutely no need for bullets to get fired from any party, and more specifically, it is beneficial to the general public if all the police brutality had come to an end.

Given today's tough and unforgivable times, it is almost impossible to contain everyone's emotions. It is best if everyone stopped the unnecessary violence.

I am scared for what is about to come, and the worst part is not knowing what is coming next.

Protest to remind people of injustices felt by many

The endemic racism in our society today is not a political issue, but an urgent humanitarian one that must be addressed before yet more people are murdered because of their skin color.

Yes, voting in elected officials who will uphold the American ideals of "liberty and justice for all" will help, but we don't have time to wait, which is why we protest - loudly, and peacefully.

Given the delay before criminal charges were brought against the Minneapolis police officers involved in the murder of George Floyd, I doubt that they would have been arrested were it not for the protesters who demanded justice.

So let's keep protesting - loudly and peacefully; exercising our constitutional right to do so, thereby reminding people of the ongoing injustices suffered by so many, and with a clear vision of eradicating the systemic racism that is the scourge of this nation.

Protest made residents truly Sunnyvale proud

My husband and I have lived in Sunnyvale since 1968.

Over these many years our city has hardly been known for its political activism, although, like many cities, it's had its share of problems regarding racism.

However, what happened last Friday made us truly Sunnyvale proud. More than 1,000 Sunnyvalians of all ethnic backgrounds and ages assembled downtown for a Peaceful Protest March in Solidarity with Black Lives Matter. They brought handcrafted signs and chanted enthusiastically "No Justice, No Peace."

The Sunnyvale police peacefully paved the way to Sunnyvale City Hall where many participants gave eloquent speeches in support of racial equality and unity.

Mayor Larry Klein and City Councilman Otto Lee were there lending their support to these peaceful protesters.

This gave us old-timers hope that this new generation of Americans will work to advance the never-ending work of seeking justice and equality for the whole community.

Together "We shall overcome."

- Gisela U. Daetz, Sunnyvale

Ironically, Trump may be catalyst for social change

Prayer has provided little more than a warm pew on Sunday morning for minorities in this country. We've not seen any meaningful legislation out of Washington since Lyndon Johnson's Civil Rights Act in 1964. Jim Crow laws were still in observance until 1968, 100 years after the Civil War.

The disdain and degradation that immigrants experience today has grown even worse under our current administration, and the increasing frequency of abusive behavior will foster a deeper divide with each generation. The problem is acknowledged worldwide.

My hope is that large-scale peaceful protests, unfortunately fueled by long-held bitterness, will ultimately culminate in systemic change to our institutions including those in charge of its administration.

Ironically, President Trump may serve as a catalyst for social change that perhaps no other president could have accomplished, not because of his leadership skills, but rather for his amoral intent and misdeeds. Sadly, it sometimes takes an extreme situation to bring about dramatic change.
