California lawmakers have allocated around £60 million in their 2021-22 budget for Jewish causes, citing a recent spike in antisemitism.

Millions will go to the Holocaust Museum Los Angeles for capital improvement, the LA-based Jewish Family Services for a permanent location, the Tauber Holocaust Library for renovation and a Jewish immigration advocacy group for asylum support.

Most of the money is for non-profit organisations and is on top of federal funds. About £7 million is also vailable for an exhibit comprising an entire floor at the Museum of Tolerance.

"Our caucus is deeply concerned about the increase in antisemitism," said Assembly member Jesse Gabriel. "We have been working hard to ensure the State of California stands with our community during these challenging times."
