California lawmaker wants Peeps to change its ingredients

SACRAMENTO, Calif. -- A bill in the California Legislature would ban five chemicals found in some of the most popular candy in the U.S. The bill by Assemblymember Jesse Gabriel would ban chemicals found in candy like Skittles, Starbursts and Peeps. Gabriel said his goal is not to ban candy in California. He says he wants companies to use different ingredients to make the candy. Two of the ingredients, including Red dye No. 3, have been linked to cancer. The National Confectioners Association says there is no reason to ban the chemicals because U.S. regulators say they are safe. The chemicals have been banned in Europe.

Tesla cuts prices on all models, 3rd cut this year

DETROIT-- Tesla cut prices on its entire U.S. electric vehicle model lineup for the third time this year in an apparent effort to lure more buyers amid rising interest rates. The cuts that appeared Friday on Tesla's website ranged from $5,000 per vehicle for Tesla's slower-selling more expensive models, the S large sedan and the X big SUV. The company lopped $2,000 off the price of the Y small SUV, its most popular model, and added a lower-cost dual-motor version priced at $49,990. The 3 small sedan saw a $1,000 price cut. The moves come as Tesla's first-quarter sales grew 36% but fell short of analysts' expectations.

FAA says leaky faucets are a safety problem on Boeing 787s

Boeing has had several production problems with its 787 Dreamliner planes over the last couple of years, and now you can add leaky lavatory faucets to the list. Federal regulators say it's a safety issue because the water can get into electronic equipment bays and damage critical parts. The Federal Aviation Administration proposed Friday to order airlines to conduct repetitive inspections under lavatory floors, and if necessary, replace faucet assemblies. The inspections would apply to 140 planes in U.S. fleets. Airlines use the Boeing 787 on longer flights including many international ones. Boeing has struggled with production flaws with the planes.

3 new 'Star Wars' movies coming, including Rey's return

LONDON -- For "Star Wars" lovers, new entertainment is a little less far, far away. Lucasfilm announced Friday three new live-action films in the franchise at Star Wars Celebration Europe 2023. One of the films will feature the return of Daisy Ridley as Rey. Directing the movies will be James Mangold, Dave Filoni and Sharmeen Obaid-Chinoy. Mangold's film will return to the dawn of the Jedi. Filoni's will look at the New Republic. Obaid-Chinoy's movie will feature Ridley back as Rey "as she builds a new Jedi Order." The news was announced by Lucasfilm President Kathleen Kennedy and also on the Star Wars website.
