JESSE WATTERS, FOX NEWS HOST, "JESSE WATTERS PRIMETIME": See who you got. Drew from Kansas, so Sticky Binder, Minnie, the Fresh Prince and the Chin and Crooked walked into a bar. That's right. This is going to be a very hot bracket. Get your choices in.

That's all for tonight. DVR, the show. Tucker is up next, and always remember, I'm Watters, and this is my world.

WILL CAIN, FOX NEWS HOST: Good evening, and welcome to TUCKER CARLSON TONIGHT. I'm Will Cain, in for Tucker, and it's a big day.

It's a big day for the Irish, and the President United States. We'd like to wish all of you a Happy St. Patrick's -- you know the thing. Joe Biden loves St. Patrick's Day, because he's told us for decades. He's Irish. He's even in the Irish American Hall of Fame. His Secret Service code name is Celtic. That's how Irish he is. Joe Biden's proud of that.

Here he was today with the Irish Prime Minister.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

JOE BIDEN, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: Every St. Patrick's Day, every Irishman goes out to find another Irishman to make a speech to, well, that's why I'm here.

I, like all of you take pride in my Irish ancestry and as long as I can remember, it's been -- it has been a part of my soul how I've been raised.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: He takes pride in his ancestry but did go on to joke that he's not really Irish because well, he's sober and his family isn't in jail. At least not yet. Because get it, the Irish drink and they get arrested a lot. Watch.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

BIDEN: I've been to Ireland many times but not to actually look up to find my actual family members and there are so many and they actually weren't in jail, they were all -- but all kidding aside, I have met the Bluets and the Finnegans and all of the folks who we are were related to.

I'm the only Irish you've ever met though who has never had a drink. So I'm okay. I'm really not Irish.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: Watching all of this, you have to wonder how Joe Biden's countrymen in the Puerto Rican community are thinking tonight. For years, Joe Biden has told us that Puerto Ricans raised him and yet, here he is giving all the credit to the Irish, they probably feel pretty slighted in Puerto Rico. Or maybe they're relieved, either way, the facts of Joe Biden's biography are getting harder and harder to pin down.

You see, it's not just the Puerto Ricans who are being airbrushed away. What about all the Poles, and the Greeks who played key roles in Joe Biden's upbringing? See when it's not St. Patrick's Day, Joe Biden talks about them a lot.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

BIDEN: You know, I grew up in a heavily Irish Catholic community in Scranton, Pennsylvania in heavily Italian and Polish community in Claymont, Delaware.

I also want to acknowledge someone else who means a great deal to our family, Rabbi Michael Beals of the congregation, Beth Shalom in Wilmington, Delaware. That's where I received my education.

I probably went to shul more than many of you did. You all think I'm kidding.

We have, in very relative terms, a large Puerto Rican population in Delaware. I was sort of raised in the Puerto Rican community at home.

I got my education for real in the Black church. That's not hyperbole, it is a fact.

I'm an honorary Greek not only today -- not only today, but every day.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: Black, Puerto Rican, Greek, Pole, Italian, Jewish, Puerto Rican. Think I said that one twice. We're just going to have to take Joe's word for it. Because it's Friday, and it's also kind of funny to imagine this Benetton of an upbringing if it were true, even though it's clearly not true.

So we've got to ask, how does a Puerto Rican Greek Irishman celebrate St. Paddy's Day? Well, we've been able to identify that Joe Biden has something of a tradition for this holiday.

First, he makes fun of the Irish while at the same time bragging about himself. Here was Joe Biden last year, for example.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

BIDEN: Bless be father for I am about to sin.

Well, I just want you to know, I may be Irish, but I'm not stupid.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: "I may be Irish, but I'm not stupid." That was last year. This year, I may be Irish but I'm not drunk and in jail.

Joe Biden has been at this for a while, so the subtlety of his insults is gone, but back in the day, Joe Biden was more clever. He found more inventive ways to sleight his Irish guests.

On St. Patrick's Day back in 2010 for example, Biden memorialized the mother of Ireland's Prime Minister, even though she was very much alive.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

BIDEN: The Taoiseach knows a lot about it, his mama lived in Long Island for 10 years or so, God rest her soul and although she is -- wait, your mom's is still alive, it is your dad who passed. God bless her soul.

I've got to get this straight.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: It's a big one to not have straight.

You can feel, I mean, it's electric Joe Biden's enthusiasm for St. Patrick's Day in these videos. It's infectious, in fact, as Kamala Harris told us today, Joe Biden's love of this holiday is authentic. And of course, no one is better to judge authenticity than Kamala Harris. Watch.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

KAMALA HARRIS, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES: As you all know, Vice President Biden. This was one of his most particular joys as Vice President, and as you all know, he is quite exuberant in that joy and I now have caught the bug.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: Joe Biden takes St. Patrick's Day seriously. I really can't talk. I use my hands a lot to talk. But how seriously does Joe Biden take St. Patrick's Day? We can't confirm this, but there are reports tonight that Biden's famous showdown with Corn Pop resulted from Mr. Pop, not having the proper reverence for St. Patrick's Day. He refused to wear green and Irish Joe had no choice but to teach him a lesson.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

BIDEN: And Corn Pop was a bad dude and he ran a bunch of bad boys. He said I'll be waiting for it. He's right there with three guys with straight razors. Not a joke. And he cut off his six foot length of chain, he pulled up and he said, you walk out, with that chain, and you walk out the car and said, you may cut me man, but I'm going to wrap this chain around your head.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: That truly is one of the greatest hits of politics. That clip never gets old. It is solid gold.

Now again, we cannot be sure that Corn Pop had offended Joe Biden's Irish Puerto Rican Greek, Polish Italian ancestry, but it's starting to look like the most likely theory.

And Chadwick Moore with "The Spectator" is here with us now to assess.

Chadwick, on a serious somewhat -- on an attempted somewhat more serious note, Chadwick. This is the administration of cultural appropriation and social justice. This is the administration that's here to teach us about racial justice.

CHADWICK MOORE, "THE SPECTATOR": Yes, I mean, if half of Biden's voters, if their grandfather said the things that Biden has said in his past about, you know, racial jungles and segregation and saying that gay people are National Security threats, and shouldn't be teachers and all of those, they would disown their own grandparents. They would be shouting at them at the Thanksgiving table, "I hope you die."

But it's okay for Joe Biden to do it, which of course, just exposes their own idiocy and hypocrisy and they don't really care. I mean, these stories that Joe Biden makes up about his past are so hilarious and ridiculous was prominently his great lie about seeing a gay couple kiss in like 1932 or whenever and his father telling him that you know, love is love.

Yes, yes, you know, I can just hear it now. Like, well, you know, the Biden family always believed that trans rights are human rights. My grandpappy told me that during the potato famine. Give it a rest, Joe Biden, nobody is buying it.

CAIN: Yes, the gay marriage epiphany was the slowest moving epiphany in history from 1950 through opposing gay marriage in the early 2010s. It just took 60 some odd years, but it was an epiphany for Joe Biden.

Chadwick, look, we can dismiss this as the tangled web of lies of one old man, but the truth is, it also fits into for example, Justin Trudeau wearing blackface or Ralph Northam wearing blackface. It seems to be the takeaway. Chadwick is, maybe this is all for show.

MOORE: Yes, and it is so deeply offensive, like everyone knows that like, liberal White guy that puts on like a Black accent when he talks to Black people and everyone just or you know, like Hillary Clinton does. And it's just so offensive and gross and cringe.

And it's sort of an effect that this is what Joe Biden does as a default setting and it is almost like he doesn't really need to because nobody expects him to be this kind of TikTok social justice warrior he is perhaps pretending to be or thinks he needs to be.

It is really just be like the old White guy that's completely corrupt. And, you know, using your family to enrich yourself and your position. That's fine. We all get it. Joe Biden, you can't distract us with trying to pretend you're Puerto Rican and Black and Jewish and everything else that you are trying to do.

CAIN: What do they say? It's not a lie if you truly believe it. Do you doubt that Joe Biden believes he is a Black Puerto Rican Jewish Pole? It could be possible he actually these things.

Chadwick Moore of "The Spectator," thank you so much for being with us tonight.

MOORE: Thank you. My pleasure.

CAIN: All right, March Madness, it is underway, and Howard University made its first appearance in the tournament since 1992. Sadly, they didn't last long.

Howard was blown out in the first round by Kansas, and that wasn't even really the worst part of the night for the Bisons. Moments after getting the short it on the court, Howard took another loss when Vice President Kamala Harris entered the locker room. She addressed the players who had just lost the biggest game of their lives as if they had just failed to complete their first day of kindergarten. Watch.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

HARRIS: That was so good. You played hard, you played to the very last second. You made all us Bisons, so, so proud. You hustled out there. You are smart. You are disciplined.

You put everything you had into the game. And you know, that's what it's about, right? Until the last minute. You guys did that.

So you keep playing with chin up and shoulders back, because you showed the world who Bison are. Right?

I mean, literally, what you have done is in historic proportion. Yes, I was at Howard back in the day where we were just happy that there was a game. Much less get into this place.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: Coach, I'd rather get blown up by 40 by Kansas than have to put up with that punishment.

No confirmed reports that that was what was said after the speech, but you saw it.

By the way, Kamala Harris was in attendance for the game and fans booed her.

Dan Dakich is a former player and head coach for the Indiana University of Hoosiers and he is also the former head coach at Bowling Green State University. He currently host the show, "Don't At Me" for Outkick and Dan joins us now.

Did you ever have such you know, a passionately inspiring motivational speech, Dan, in all your years of Bowling Green or Indiana?

DAN DAKICH, SPORTS COMMENTATOR: When I was a coach, no, we just used to throw things, Will, and then we'll figure it out later. All right, we all know that Kamala Harris is a god-awful public speaker. In fact, I always think she's high on something. I swear to God.

But I've got to tell you, that's a tough speech, Will. That is a tough speech. If you're a coach, I'm trying to be fair here, that's a tough speech. If you're a celebrity you come in, you're asked to speak to a bunch of kids that just lost by 28 points. You know what they want to do? They want to get out of there.

But I've got to tell you, she is the worst public speaker, I think ever in politics. I almost want to take Joe Biden out of it. And by the way, you had me rolling with, you're wondering how his fellow Puerto Rican countrymen were taking his love of his Irish heritage. I was rolling here.

But that's a tough speech. She talks to people like they're in kindergarten. She loves her own jokes. I would be sitting there going, "Man, come on," but I will say this, I thought the Howard kids showed class. I thought they were fantastic. I thought they sat there. They were respectful.

And I did like at the end, that she invited the Howard team to come to the White House. I did think that was cool. But man, oh, man, that's a bad speaker. How is that a Vice President speaking like that?

CAIN: You know, Dan, I love your search for fairness. I truly do. Because when I think of fairness, I think of Dan Dakich. And I love your pursuit of fairness. If this were one off bad speech by Winston Churchill, I think we could forgive the moment. It is a tough moment, to your point.

I don't know what Coach Knight would have said. To your point, he might have thrown a chair. But this is part of the record for Kamala Harris. This is -- speaks to everyone like they're in second grade or in kindergarten. And you have to wonder what she's waiting on. It's like an applause line that she got on Colbert, or an applause line she got during the vice presidential debate that she now thinks is coming at every moment, and it is always unearned. It's missing.

DAKICH: Yes, well, she has no charisma. She has no sense of timing. And then one of the beautiful things about it is she loves her own jokes. My shows is on Outkick, it's from nine to 11. You've been a guest.

But the content we get from come on Kamala/Kamela Harris, or whatever her name is, is unbelievable. Because every time she sits there, every time she is in some type of public speak, speaking -- at dinner, maybe it's an event, she gives you content, Will, because it is awful.

She is a content machine, but it is always the same thing, gibberish word salad, laughing at your own jokes, and speaking to whomever it is like they just started, you said kindergarten, I'll give them second or third grade.

CAIN: Well, how again, fair of Dan Dakich. He said it himself, but it's nine to 11 Eastern Time at Outkick. It is "Don't At Me" where in his pursuit of fairness he has seen the light and known that at least after one game in the tournament, the Texas Longhorns are a real national championship contender.

Dan Dakich, always good to see you. Thanks, Dan.

DAKICH: Thank you, my friend.

CAIN: All right, Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot is on her way out the door. A lot of people are thrilled about that, including Chicago journalist, William J. Kelly. He just unloaded on Lori Lightfoot at a City Council meeting. You've got to see that, hear that. He is going to be with us straight ahead.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

CAIN: Now that Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot has lost re-election, she will be leaving office soon, and a lot of journalists in the city are thrilled about that because Lightfoot waged a war on press freedom. At one point, she even refused to let White reporters interview her.

Lightfoot also pulled the press credentials of reporter, William J. Kelly because she didn't like his reporting.

On Wednesday, at a City Council meeting, Kelly gave Lightfoot this sendoff.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

WILLIAM J. KELLY, JOURNALIST: People in Chicago elected you. You shut down our schools, you shut down the churches, you shut down the businesses. You did the one thing that I thought could never happen.

As somebody who was born and raised on the south side of Chicago, I never thought in my life that I would ever see the City of Chicago brought down so low as you have managed to bring it down.

Shame on you.

That is a legacy that you are going to have to carry. Future historians are going to have a hard time understanding how you are -- how you ever even became Mayor of the City of Chicago.

I hope that you realize what damage you have done to the city. I hope that after today's City Council meeting, you will pack your suitcase and get the hell out of my city.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: She is going to begin to get the hell out of office. That's for sure.

William J. Kelly is a journalist in Chicago and he joins us now.

William, great to have you on the program.

I can't help but notice, that was a City Council meeting. It wasn't a press briefing. It wasn't a Q&A. That looked like a public comment. Why was that the circumstances of your statement to Mayor Lori Lightfoot?

WILLIAM: Absolutely. Thank you so much for having me, Will.

Well, like everything else in the City of Chicago now, it is, you know, Mission Impossible meets Kobayashi Maru. We had -- traditionally, Mayor Lightfoot would do a press conference after every City Council meeting, but of course, this being her last City Council meeting, due to the fact that she lost her re-election campaign, she canceled her City Council press conference.

So I knew that if I was going to have a chance to speak to her at all, I would have to register for the public comment section, and that's exactly what I did. It was a lottery, only five people, only five names were drawn from a big glass bowl. And miraculously, mine was one of them.

CAIN: Right.

WILLIAM: And I was given three minutes. And you know, 60 seconds worth the distance run times three.

CAIN: You know, Luck of the Irish there. But now without effort. You had to enter the lottery to get a chance to speak to your Mayor. Why was this so important for you to say what you said to Lightfoot?

WILLIAM: Well, it's extremely important, Will, because over the course of the last few years, a number of people have contacted me, reached out to me and said, you know, here's a question, I would like for you to ask the Mayor. Here is something I would like you to say.

Police officers who had been overworked and obviously mistreated and a spike in police suicides as a result. And I feel like this particular City Council meeting was the last chance that I may ever have to actually tell Mayor Lori Lightfoot, not just what was on my mind, but what was on the minds of so many Chicagoans, and I'm just thankful that I had the opportunity to do it.

CAIN: Right. And I heard in that moment where you told her you hope the history is written accurately, that you intend to write that book, that you intend to write the history of these years in Chicago. We could hear that in the video clip of your appearance there in the City Council.

What we cannot hear, William, is the response of the Mayor or the Council. What did they say to you at the end of your statement?

WILLIAM: Well, you know, to add insult to injury, after I'm done giving my public comment or victim impact statement is how I actually viewed it, one of Mayor Lightfoot City Council allies, heckled me.

She actually said, you know, she called me a derogatory name and then she said that all of the problems that Mayor Lori Lightfoot had to handle or mishandled was the result of the pandemic. And, you know, I just, I guessed the entire City of Chicago and let this City Councilwoman know that she was in fact the pandemic.

CAIN: Well, in Chicago for the moment at least, it looks like there's some relief from the pandemic. We hope that the circumstances in that city which have been largely made it unlivable for the past several years are alleviated and we appreciate you hopping on with all of us tonight, William J. Kelly, and for that moment in front of Mayor Lori Lightfoot.

WILLIAM: Absolutely. Thank you, Will.

CAIN: All right. People in East Palestine, Ohio report that they've been getting sicker in recent days. It could have something to do with the fact that the water there is filled with poison. That's why the residents of East Palestine hired Scott Smith to do independent testing on the water and soil. He is the chief Sustainability Officer of ECO Integrated Technologies. His results were accepted by the EPA, and Scott Smith joins us now from East Palestine.

Scott, great to have you with us.

As we mentioned, you were hired independently by some residents there in Ohio to see what's in their water, see what's in their soil, see what's in their air. What did you find?

SCOTT SMITH, CHIEF SUSTAINABILITY, ECO INTEGRATED TECHNOLOGIES: Well, first of all, thanks for having me, Will. It's great to be here.

And we found dioxins, but before that, I'm going to tell you something. Seventeen years ago, my business and a hundred employees jobs were wiped out in oil and chemical contaminated waters. That's when I realized that water testing and remediation were seriously flawed.

And ever since this experience, I go into communities affected by water contamination. And I help people get the truth, so they don't have to go through what I went through.

And here's the main lesson: You can't find what you don't look for. We started looking for dioxins last week in February. Well, we got initial results back. We got the water results back, we don't have the soil and air, and we found dioxins, and dioxins essentially are the fentanyl of chemicals. And why? Because they're measured in parts per quadrillion, as much I've never heard of parts per quadrillion and I've been doing this for a long time.

Just to put it in perspective, lead, metals, other chemicals are measured in parts per billion, or parts per million. One part per quadrillion is equivalent, if you have 20 trillion pennies to one penny. That's how sensitive it is.

CAIN: And what is the health risk of dioxins?

SMITH: Well, it's related to Agent Orange. And if you can look it up -- I'm not a toxicologist, I've got a lot of experts, we have a great team -- cancer, it is very dangerous to pregnant women, and a whole host of other issues. And I can tell you what separates this from other experiences I've been to, people are getting sicker by the day, children are spitting up coughing up blood. I saw pictures today when I was with residents.

CAIN: So Scott, you mentioned you can't find what you don't look for. You looked for dioxins. You've been doing this, as you mentioned, I think you said some 60 odd incidences you have investigated independently since the one that you lived through yourself.

And I know you've said this, Scott, that has in turn, given you the playbook for how these things are normally handled by the government, the EPA, by private corporations that do the testing, what is the playbook?

SMITH: The playbook is let there be no doubt about it, the public relations, people are calling all the shots. And I can tell you right now, the playbook is going to be dioxins are ubiquitous in the environment. And I don't even need to get the rest of the results. Because I can tell you right now, children spitting up blood, people with headaches getting sicker, that was not ubiquitous in health symptoms in this environment.

The good news is, we're going to find the truth and we're going to find out what people have been exposed to and they'll be able to go to the doctors and get help and this will be able to be cleaned up properly.

CAIN: Oh, that's where I want to finally arrive at in our conversation, Scott. I know you've tested furnace filters, because it's the greatest indication of what's in the air and what people have actually inhaled. I know you're going to look at water and soil as well.

And I appreciate you're not a toxicologist, I appreciate the limits of your own expertise. But having done this 60 times to your point, what is your outlook for East Palestine, Ohio? Is it that the dioxins can be removed and people can again live in this village? Or what is the prescription for the cure here in this village and for these people?

SMITH: Well, there is an expert team, and you've got to solve the problem like Einstein said, you've got to admit there's a problem and then we could solve it. We need to admit there's a problem here and work together.

I also want to say furnace filters. You'd want to know what people were breathing in their lungs. The furnace filter is the closest thing to opening up someone's lung and I want to tell you a quick story. Last night I was at a community fair with Courtney Miller and other residents. We went from the EPA table to the railroad table to the CTEH, that's the contractor. We went to the EPA they said we're not testing furnace filters, the railroad is. We went to the railroad, they said we're not testing furnace filters, CTEH is.

So we did that round robin and we found out there may be other people testing furnace filters, but we're going to get all these furnace filter results in over the next 15 to 30 days.

CAIN: Well, I appreciate the note of optimism, by the way, Scott. In order to correct a problem, you have to accurately diagnose it. But I hear you with that note of optimism that wants it to accurately diagnosed. This village can be saved. This village can be cleaned. I heard that earlier in our conversation, and I think that's an important note of optimism.

This is important information, your independent analysis is appreciated. Thank you for sharing it here tonight on TUCKER CARLSON TONIGHT.

SMITH: Thank you for having me.

CAIN: All right, if you don't like mowing your lawn, and who does, and you don't want to hire a lawn service, there is a new solution available. Get a lamb mower. The geniuses behind this business join us straight ahead.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

CAIN: Happy St. Patrick's Day.

Hey look, some ideas are so smart, it is hard to believe no one ever thought of them before. This here is one of those ideas.

If you've ever mowed the lawn or thought, there has to be a better and easier way to do this. Guess what? You were right. There is a better way to do it. You can just rent some lambs to do it for you.

A new company lets you hire lamb mowers instead of lawn mowers. Cory Suter is the owner of lambmowers.com. He's based in Fairfax County. And Cory joins us now to explain.

And you have your labor force behind you, Cory. How is it that no one has thought of this? You've got to tell me about your inspiration and the market demand for lamb mowers?

CORY SUTER, OWNER, LAMBMOWERS.COM: Thanks so much, Will.

I don't want to go out too much on the lamb here. I don't know if you want me to ram through some bad sheep lines, but I am really honored to be on your show.

CAIN: We're glad to have you. We're glad to have you here on TUCKER CARLSON TONIGHT. Go ahead. I want to hear this. I have a ton of questions about your workforce there and their appetite?

SUTER: Yes, well, Will, we are the only licensed and insured landscaping company that also gets invited to kids birthdays and evening wine parties. We also have a lot of customers that just hire us to get rid of the weeds.

And that's what makes me so passionate about what I do. I got into lambmowers.com because I care about conserving soil and water resources for future generations, and my sheep do a wonderful job of putting organic matter back in soil where it belongs. I have a lot of happy customers. It brings people a lot of joy to have sheep in their yard.

CAIN: Putting organic matter back into the soil where it belongs -- does that mean I have to hire like a poop pickup service after you mow my lawn with the lambs? You fertilize as you cut the lawn?

SUTER: So my sheep do provide some biodegradable fertilizer pellets. And, yes, if you put in the lawn clippings back on the lawn, that's what our soil needs.

You know, all of our soils here in the US used to have over eight percent organic matter. And now we're back down to only around half a percent in a lot of our farmland and that just means there's not a lot of nutrients left in that soil to feed us. It fuels the obesity epidemic in the US to have soils that are depleted of nutrients and organic matter.

CAIN: Yes.

SUTER: And so I'm really passionate about soil health. And, you know, doing lamb mowers is one way I help educate people about that.

CAIN: Well, I've actually read a lot about that recently, quite to your point, the soil has lost a lot of its nutritional value through industrial farming and widespread use of chemical fertilizer. And as we point out, you're getting back. And I'm going to tell my wife the same thing when I don't pick up in the backyard, I'm giving back to the soil right now.

But Cory really quick, the name --

SUTER: That's right. Lazy gardening is great.

CAIN: The names of your workforce behind you. Can you introduce me to a few of them?

SUTER: Sure. So right here in front of me, I think this is Oreo, and then okay, yes, you can see that. So you see Snowy here, the cutest little lamb.

CAIN: Yes.

SUTER: And then right behind her is her mother, Chocolate Chip. Behind that is ice cream.

CAIN: I am painting up a scene.

SUTER: And it looks like okay, yes, my kids helped name the sheep. And we really have a lot of fun.

CAIN: Cory, we have a little delay that's why --

SUTER: One of my kids named a sheep Monster Truck.

CAIN: So that must have been --

SUTER: We call him Monty for sure.

CAIN: And I hate to enforce gender stereotypes, but that must have been one of your sons. Cory, I'm seeing the before and after pictures of your workforce there and what you've done in the backyards of many overgrown neighborhoods.

Your lambs eating through what no lawnmower or weeder can make their way through. So, it's a fascinating business. It's an opening in the market. It's giving back as you point out to the planet and we wish you and Marshmallow and Oreo and Monster Truck all the best in your business, lamb mowers. Thank you, Cory.

SUTER: Oh, thank you so much for supporting a local small business. I really appreciate you having me on the show, Will.

SUTER: You bet.

CAIN: All right, so we'll move gears to this. The idea of the National Guard is to defend the country, but currently more than 20,000 National Guard troops are deployed overseas.

There is a new effort underway to bring many of these troops home. Sixteen States are now writing laws to keep our National Guard troops at home instead of sending them to fight foreign wars.

Sergeant Dan McKnight has been traveling the country pushing this legislation. He is a retired Marine Sergeant and Dan McKnight joins us now.

Dan, thank you so much for being with us.

Tell me about this. The National Guard is at least in part under the oversight of State Governors. What can be done on this Defend our Guard Initiative that has now at least been introduced in, I think, what is it? Sixteen States and perhaps passed, is it one or two -- Montana and soon to be perhaps Arizona?

SGT. DAN MCKNIGHT (RET), US MARINE CORPS: That's correct, Arizona Senate passed it through Committee, and it's probably going to pass the floor on Monday. But the Defend the Guard Bill essentially says that the National Guard cannot be deployed under Federal service into foreign combat, unless Congress has first done their job and declared war. That's something Congress hasn't done in 80 years, and we found ourselves in a state of perpetual and endless war ever since World War Two. It is time for Congress to kind of reclaim their authority under the Constitution. That's our authority that we've given to Congress and properly declare war.

If it is important enough for us to send the lives of Americans and the treasure of American taxpayers into a foreign land for combat, then Congress should do the right thing, and they should debate it and declare it and put their name on the line before our soldiers ever put their boots on the ground.

CAIN: Such a great point. There was a time when it was expected that would declare a war before we went to war. But if this did pass, and so for example, it has in Montana, so we can use Montana as our example.

Give me the mechanics of then what unfolds if in fact, the State passes the Defend our Guard Law, is it that the State Governor of for example, again, Montana says no to the President of the United States, or to Congress, not until you declare war?

MCKNIGHT: You know, that's a great point. That's a great question. There is no mission that the National Guard participates in, whether it's a domestic service, domestic defense or an emergency response mission, or even a foreign mission, foreign training, or operational missions that are non- combat related.

Not a single mission that the National Guard participates in will be affected by Defend the Guard. The only thing that would be affected is the use of the National Guard in a foreign war of choice waged by the President of the United States with no authority from Congress. That's the only thing that the National Guard would be limited on.

So it would be the Governor standing up and asserting his right as the executive of the State to withhold the troops from combat that has not been declared.

CAIN: So Dan, before we run, I want to ask you this, I would imagine that were somebody sitting here taking you in a debate, they would bring up the Authorization for Use of Military Force passed after 9/11. It seems to be an open-ended rolling authorization from Congress to pursue terrorism and make war. What would be your response to the AUMF and its role here when it comes to Defend our Guard?

MCKNIGHT: Yes, the AUMF has been the mechanism that we've used for decades, and it is not a declaration of war. What an AUMF is, is Congress abdicating their authority.

They are giving the President a blank check, a permission slip, to make a decision whether to go to war or not and then they agree that if he goes to war, then they'll just continue to write checks with no oversight, no geographical restrictions, no plan, no definition of victory, and no way to bring the troops home in a short period of time.

The AUMF is not a declaration of war, and it should never be used. So the Defend the Guard Bill would put that authority back on Congress, that responsibility back on Congress, to reclaim that from the executive branch and realign the powers that that we granted to them in the Constitution.

CAIN: What a great way to say it. Great way to reinforce and highlight the point of our Constitution the powers that we granted to them that once we thought were obvious, that Congress had to declare war before committing us to war.

Sergeant Dan McKnight, thank you so much for being with us.

MCKNIGHT: You bet. Please visit DefendTheGuard.us and click on Arizona and sign the petition and help us get this across the finish line on Monday.

CAIN: There you go. It's coming to a vote in Arizona. Thank you.

So a New Jersey man just successfully walked from the Atlantic to the Pacific, 3,000 miles. Why? He is going to join us next and tell us.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

(BEGIN VIDEO "FORREST GUMP" CLIP)

FORREST GUMP, FICTIONAL CHARACTER: I thought, maybe I'd just run across Greenbow County, and I figured, since I ran this far, maybe I'd just run across the Great State of Alabama, and that's what I did. I ran clear across Alabama.

For no particular reason, I just kept on going. I ran clear the ocean.

(END VIDEO CLIP)

CAIN: Well, Forrest Gump just kept going and going for "no particular reason." But now we have a real life Forrest Gump. I hope, he is not offended by that characterization, because he has an actual honorable reason that he walked coast to coast. His name is Tommy Pasquale and he just went from the Atlantic to the Pacific 3,000 miles. It took him 143 days and he said along the way he: "Listened to country music, Bruce Springsteen classics and 'The Will Cain Podcast.'" He did it to raise money and awareness for the many homeless veterans in this country.

Tommy Pasquale joins us now to tell us about it.

So, I think the entire country is wondering about your entertainment choices. Out there in the middle of the country, no one but Bruce Springsteen and Will Cain?

TOMMY PASQUALE, WALKED ACROSS THE US FOR VETERANS: Right, I knew you'd like that.

CAIN: Yes.

PASQUALE: Only the classics.

CAIN: That's exactly right. American icons, if you will.

PASQUALE: Right.

CAIN: Tommy, tell us first of all, your inspiration to walk from the Atlantic to the Pacific?

PASQUALE: Yes, so it was a goal of mine for the past few years to do something special like this, and with that, I knew that I wanted to pair it with a really worthy charity, so I teamed up with the National Coalition for Homeless Veterans, trying to get these brave men and women who have served our country so valiantly off the streets, it just doesn't sit right with me that on any given night, 38,000 veterans go to sleep homeless in this country.

CAIN: And you raised almost $100,000.00 so far. Many people watching right now can help contribute, I'm sure.

PASQUALE: Correct.

CAIN: How could they do that?

PASQUALE: Yes. So you can do it two ways. One, you go directly to the National Coalition for Homeless Veterans website, donate directly there and check out all the great work that they're doing. Or you could go straight to my Instagram, Tommy_Walks_America. And in my bio, I have a link to a GoFundMe where you can donate there as well.

CAIN: What a cause, what a purpose, different than Forrest Gump, to actually help America's homeless veterans.

And now, talk about the walk, 143 days. I want to ask you, I guess the most open-ended question I can, but what was it like?

PASQUALE: It was tough. It's definitely the toughest thing I've ever done. But I would say overall, it was a great experience. I'm really happy I did it. And I can honestly say with a straight face, I'm very happy it's over as well.

CAIN: What was the scariest moment?

PASQUALE: There was a lot of scary moments, just you know, living in a tent with the elements out there, you know, hearing some coyotes in the distance and just the wind whipping against the tent. I thought you know, there was times where I thought I'd never see home again, but I made it through.

CAIN: How's the body? How did you feel after walking for 3,000 miles in 143 days?

PASQUALE: You know, it was painful. But you know, like I always say to everyone who asked you know, I was hurting the whole way but I wasn't injured and as long as I'm hurting and not injured, I could still play through it.

CAIN: Tommy and I feel like we know each other because he has listened to "The Will Cain Podcast," and I've said or numerous occasions, I want to do something like what you've done here. I've wanted to canoe the Lewis and Clark path through the Missouri River or ride a cattle trail from Texas to Montana, but what you've just done I think is a bucket list check item for many, many people out there in America to walk this country and you did it for a purpose to help other Americans.

And I know that I for one, I think, most of America appreciates that about you Tommy Pasquale. He is going to be on "The Will Cain Podcast." We're going to go a little more into depth about what those nights, what those days were like. But we are proud of you and we really appreciate you being with us tonight.

PASQUALE: Thank you so much for having me on, Will.

CAIN: All right.

All right, if you like Pez or Skittles, there's some bad news tonight. Eating those candies might soon be illegal. That's straight ahead.

(COMMERCIAL BREAK)

[VIDEO CLIP PLAYS]

CARLSON: Look man, you check your dignity at the door on "FOX and Friends" and you hope at some point in your career, you can recover gravitas.

That was me doing an Irish step dance on "FOX and Friends." I hope you're having a good St. Patrick's Day.

Unfortunately, though, if you'd like Skittles, the news of the day has not been so happy. FOX's Kevin Corke has the story for us now -- Kevin.

KEVIN CORKE, FOX NEWS CORRESPONDENT: My man, Will, good dancing there. Very impressive.

Border insecurity, homelessness, the nation's highest gas prices, and a soaring crime problem, that is all California is dealing with, but instead of focusing on that, some lawmakers out there in the Golden State are too busy acting like the food police. They're focused on candy.

Say what you say?

Well, it's true. In fact, if a State Assemblyman there has his way, you won't be able to buy Skittles or Sour Patch Kids or similar candies for very much longer, so much for tasting the rainbow.

The guy's name is Jesse Gabriel. His district is just outside LA. He has proposed a ban on many of the ingredients that are in the popular candies because there's some disputed research out there that suggests a possible cancer link.

Now, if successful, the ban could mean the long goodbye not just for Skittles, but also for Trident Gum and Campbell Soup, and even some bread brands.

Now in a statement, Gabriel said: "Californians shouldn't have to worry that the food they buy in their neighborhood grocery store might be full of dangerous additives or toxic chemicals." It should be pointed out there was a lawsuit against Mars last year on similar grounds. It was tossed. Fight for Skittles.

Back to you.

CAIN: Fight for Skittles and get out of California.

Kevin, thank you so much.

CORKE: You bet.

CAIN: All right, don't forget to check out "The Will Cain Podcast." Tommy Pasquale loves it.

We just had a fascinating conversation about SVB and FTX today. You can listen to "The Will Cain Podcast" at Apple, Spotify or at FOX News Podcast.

That does it for us tonight.
